

The Pricing Power Chart

Bigger deals at the price you want. Start with the problem, not the price.

A buyer who has put a number on the problem compares your price to that number, not to your competitors. Fill this once per offer. Then run the questions on every call, and let the buyer name the cost. Not you.

	1. PROBLEM in their words, their sentence	2. IMPACT money, time, how it feels	3. SOURCE what really causes it
A	11 11 ***
B	11 11 ***
C	11 11 ***

The 3 filters (a problem stays only if all 3 pass)

1.  You can fix the source. The source, not the symptom. If you can't fix it, cross it out, however real it is.
2.  A real client said it. On a call, in an email, in a review. No quote? It's a guess. Mark it  and verify it on your next call.
3.  It costs real money or time. Big enough that doing nothing hurts. If nobody would pay to make it stop, it's a complaint.

Stuck on Source? Keep asking "and what causes that?" until you hit something you fix.

The 9-question pattern (one question per box)

- Problem "What's the frustration with [X] right now? What have you tried?"
- Impact "What does that cost you? What happens if nothing changes in the next 6 months?"
- Source A question that lets the buyer find the cause. "When a deal goes quiet, what happened in the call before?"
- 3 problems × 3 boxes = 9 questions. Questions, not pitch lines. When the buyer says it out loud, it's theirs. So is the urgency.

The test after every call: or per problem

Date	Call	A	B	C	Their sentence (write it down word for word)

 = the buyer confirmed it in their own words.  = it didn't land. Two  in a row and no  ? Swap that problem for the next one on your list.

Our chart, filled in

Our client: the owner of a B2B company (software, consulting, financial services), hiring salespeople, still the main closer. The Problem lines are what founders say to us on calls. Marked honestly:  heard from a client in those words,  our read, still being verified call by call.

	PROBLEM their words	IMPACT what it costs them	SOURCE what really causes it
A	"I need more leads, but I don't have time for marketing."	Annual target not hit yet, worried they won't hit it at all. "I don't have time to work on the sales process, just in it." New hires have nobody to call. Sales isn't fun.	Nothing produces leads without the owner's time. Marketing and prospecting run on their calendar, so when they're closing, the pipeline dries up.
B	"It takes many meetings to close. We get ghosted."	Cost of sale going up, in money and emotionally. Many meetings per deal, deals delayed, deals dying at 95%. The target slips further.	Right things in the wrong order. The proposal goes out before the buyer has said what doing nothing costs and committed to a starting date. Nobody is in control of the conversation.  verifying
C	"We're not landing deals in the size we want."  a founder told us: "I priced the first few too low."	Same effort for smaller deals, so more deals are needed for a target that's already slipping. Price pressure and discounting.  verifying	Price before value. The buyer never puts a number on what the problem costs, so the price looks big and the deal shrinks.  verifying

Can we fix the source? (filter 1)

A → marketing and prospecting processes that run without the owner's calendar, plus a weekly rhythm: Monday Strategy, Friday Learnings.

B → the 8 Steps of the Repeatable Sale, in order: Cost of Inaction (Step 4) and Starting Date (Step 7) come before the Statement of Work (Step 8).

C → Cost of Inaction (Step 4) comes before Investment (Step 6). The buyer names the cost. Our price then sits next to their number.

A. More leads, no time

A1 Where do your leads come from today? What have you tried to get more?

A2 Where are you against this year's target? What happens if the pipeline looks the same in 3 months?

A3 When you get busy closing, what happens to your marketing and prospecting?

B. Many meetings, ghosted

B1 Walk me through the last deal that went quiet. Where did it stop?

B2 How many meetings does a deal take now? What does that cost you, in money and in energy?

B3 Before you sent that proposal, had the buyer told you what happens if they do nothing?

C. Deals too small

C1 What size did you want your last deal to be, and what did you land?

C2 How many more deals at today's size do you need to hit the target?

C3 When you named the price, did the buyer already know what the problem costs them?

Use the client sentences you collect as headlines, email openers and post hooks. They're already in the buyer's words.
